

PIKE PLACE
AT 100
Images of Our Market

Circa 1908

The earliest days

The Pike Street-Pike Place bend was almost always chaotic as farmers brought horse-drawn wagons full of fresh fruits and vegetables to sell. Adding to the congestion, automobiles were beginning to mingle among the buggies and buyers. This photo, which looks north across Pike Place, predates the building of the $10,000 arcade of covered stalls that opened in early 1911, but shows that vendors understood the benefit of awnings to protect their goods, themselves and their customers from the elements.

— Photo from The Seattle Times archive

For historical photo galleries and to purchase Seattle Times images of the Pike Place Market: seattletimes.com/pikeplacemarket

The Seattle Times

The Seattle Times